

Abstract

A needle-free injection system is described. The needle-free injection system may be suitable for injection into internal organs. In one embodiment, the needle-free injection system includes an elongate end effector that may or may not include a curved or angled distal end. The needle-free injection system may include one or more orifices.

5